

I am really upset by what Sinclair is doing two weeks before the election. I believe it is biased and wrong to show a smear campaign against Kerry right before a major election. I think that it is the right of people to see this documentary but it is obviously being used in a political way to get Republican support. The least that Sinclair could do is release a pro-Kerry documentary like "Going Upriver" so that it isn't one-sided. This is the same station network that refused to show a special announcing and honoring all the victims of Iraq. It seems to me that Sinclair is deciding what the citizens should and can watch. Sinclair stations use public airwaves free of charge and are required by law to serve the public interest. What they are doing is serving their interests. I would really not like to see "Stolen Honor" air at all, but if it does Sinclair has a duty to the people to show another side of the story as well. Thankyou.
